Compuware Announces Covisint's Collaborative Platform for Healthcare to Help Control Spiraling Costs and Improve the Quality of Care

Compuware Covisint Provides Secure Interoperability and Real-time Collaboration Benefiting Healthcare Participants Regardless of Size, Location or Technical Sophistication

DETROIT--September 25, 2006--Compuware Corporation (NASDAQ: CPWR) today announced that Compuware Covisint has leveraged its existing infrastructure to provide a collaborative exchange that enables the access to and improved visibility of critical healthcare information, resulting in reduced costs and an increase in the quality of care. Multiple studies show that roughly one-third of the approximate $2 trillion spent annually on healthcare in the U.S. is redundant or inappropriate.

"The healthcare landscape is changing dramatically, and information technology is driving much of that change," said Newt Gingrich, former Speaker of the House and Founder of the Center for Health Transformation. "More must be done, and the Center for Health Transformation is proud to be working with leaders like Compuware Covisint, who are driving innovations that modernize, connect and improve healthcare organizations so they can deliver better care for all Americans."

Covisint seeks to bring disparate healthcare entities together, regardless of their size, geography or technical sophistication. This exchange will simplify the secure sharing of sensitive healthcare information between key healthcare stakeholders, including state and federal programs, employers, payers, providers, physicians, patients and emerging healthcare information networks.

"Covisint has enabled us to dramatically improve the way our members do business," said Bill Pully, President of the North Carolina Hospital Association. "Covisint securely connects our hospital and affiliate members, enabling real-time collaboration, automation and the visibility to ensure the best outcomes for clinicians and patients. Just as important, since this is a hosted solution, we were able to use our existing systems, keeping costs low, and yet immediately gain from an integrated and secure framework."

Covisint is uniquely positioned to mitigate the cost of entry and accelerate the time-to-value for key healthcare initiatives with this hosted service. Covisint's customers have improved revenue cycle management, reduced and eliminated redundancies and improved the quality of healthcare by facilitating the access to and retrieval of both critical administrative and clinical information.
